WORKSHOP II
(14:00 – 16:30)
CONSUMER VULNERABILITY

- What are the next steps to a broader understanding of consumer vulnerability?
- How can the design of financial services make the tough times easier?
- What challenges does consumer vulnerability present?
- How can we practically address consumer vulnerability in diverse jurisdictions?

Much consumer protection legislation is underpinned by the notion of the average or typical consumer, and what that typical consumer might expect and understand or how they might behave. However, consumers in vulnerable circumstances are often significantly less able to represent their own interests, and are more likely to suffer harm than the ‘average’ consumer.

Vulnerability can affect people’s interaction with any consumer market, but it is particularly challenging in the context of financial services due in part to the long-term nature of commitments and the complexity of products and information.

This workshop will explore the results and practical outcomes of research commissioned by the UK Financial Conduct Authority which found that many consumers in vulnerable circumstances are not receiving fair treatment from their financial services providers. The presentation will include a video and the audience will be encouraged to ask questions.

This will be followed by a panel session to discuss the practicalities and challenges of understanding and addressing consumer vulnerability with representatives from industry, regulation and ombudsmen (redress).
